Randolph Maidens appeared in Williamson County court Tuesday morning to plead not guilty on all charges regarding the alleged murder of his wife, Rachael Maidens.

Maidens, 42, also has three new conditions on his temporary restraining order, which allows the Brentwood Police Department full access to view his whereabouts from the GPS tracking device located on him, he is not permitted to drive or acquire a vehicle since he does not have a valid drivers license and he cannot access his home in the Governors Club.

However, if the order expires he can visit the home only with his attorney and after giving the BPD a 24-hour notice prior to his arrival.

There is also an exclusion zone on Maidens' GPS device that was set by the juvenile court that prohibits him from coming near Rachael Maidens' family and his 2-year-old daughter, Natalie, who is in the custody of her grandmother, Elizabeth Frisbie.

Maidens has four charges against him in his criminal case, which include one count of premeditated murder, two counts of tampering with evidence and one count of child neglect.

He also has combined his Driving Under the Influence charge with this case and pleaded not guilty to that charge as well.

“The DUI is pending as well,” said David Raybin, Maidens’ attorney. “The homicide allegations and the DUI, all those cases, were consolidated and we’ll be back in November for another court appearance.”

Attorneys on both sides met Tuesday morning and District Attorney agreed not to pursue the review of the bond amount, which was lessened from $2.5 million to $750,000, if the new bond conditions were implemented.

“We’re abiding by the orders of the court and working on the case,” Raybin said.

Raybin added that Maidens location has been provided to the district attorney’s office, which was a previous condition of release.

Maidens will appear in court again on November 12.
